

Getting Started With Flickr

If you already have a flickr account, please skip to step 4.

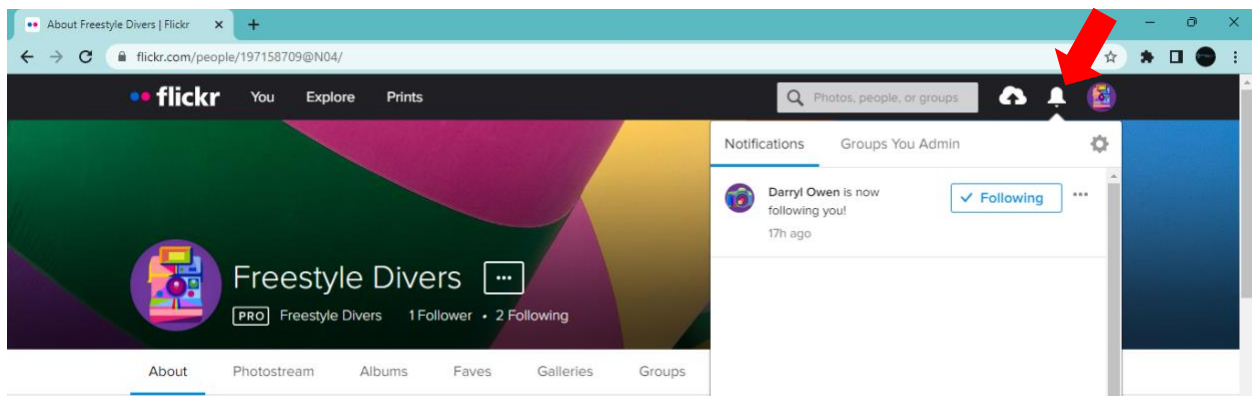

1. Go to flickr.com

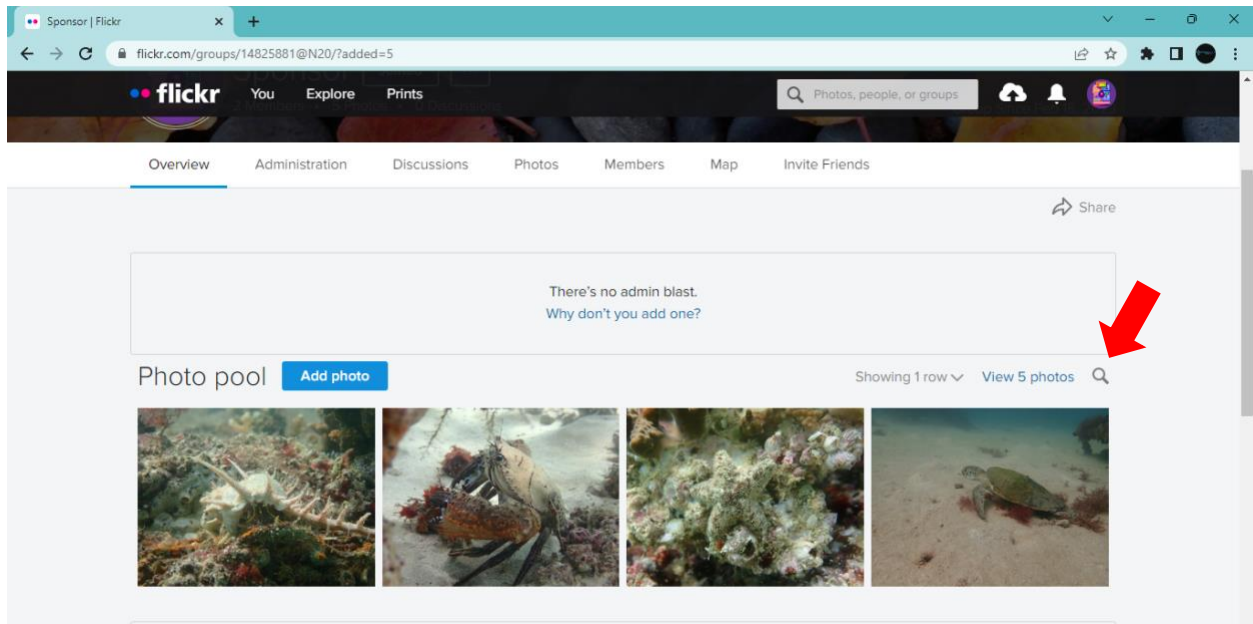

2. In the top right corner, click sign up

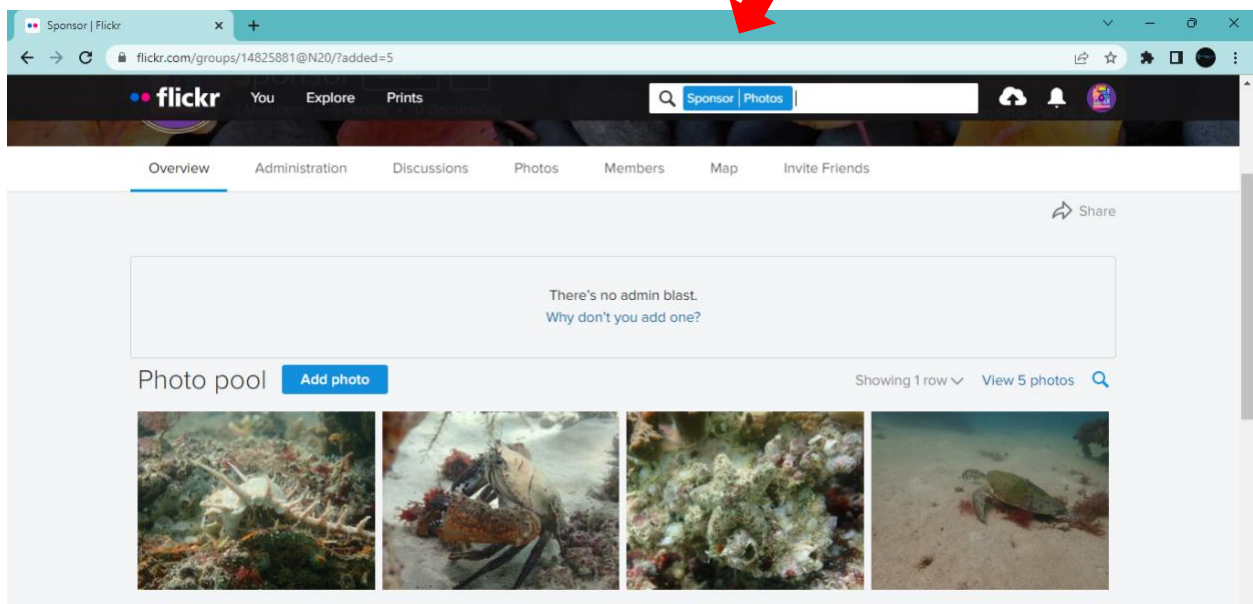

3. Fill in your details and verify your account through email
4. Send us your email address used to either info@freestyledivers.me or by whatsapp at +971 50 891 8207 with a note of what sponsor you are working with
5. We will use this information to invite you to a private group to access the photos associated with your reef(s)
 - a. Make sure to click on your notifications to check for the invite on flickr as there is no obvious indication or email sent

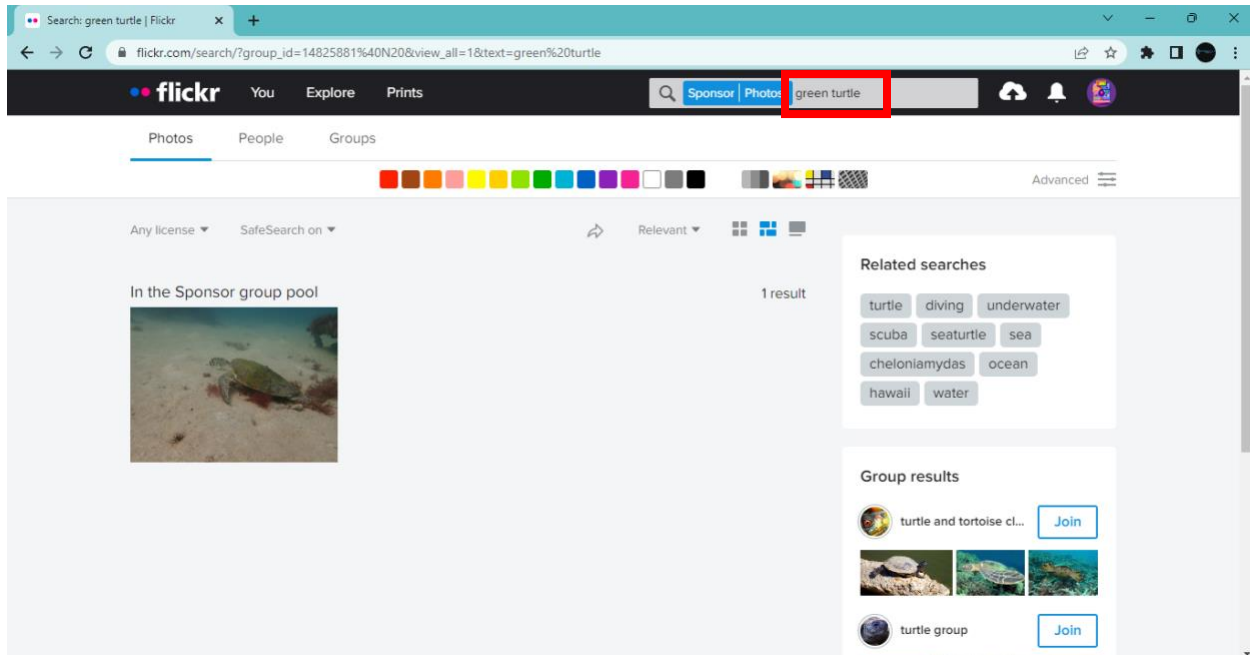

6. Once you are part of the group you will be able to view all the footage we have posted there
 - a. Please note as members of the group you are able to comment and change tags on a photo. We would love to get your feedback on the photos and interact with you directly more, however, please be careful to not change any of the tags as this can restrict how you can find specific photos. The tags also contain detailed information that you may want to use, like what species have been identified in the photos. It will be difficult for us to monitor all the tags to know which ones are missing. If you have suggestions for other tags you would like to be added, please feel free to get in touch with us directly.
7. You also have the ability to search for specific photos/videos. Click on the magnifying glass on the right above the photo pool

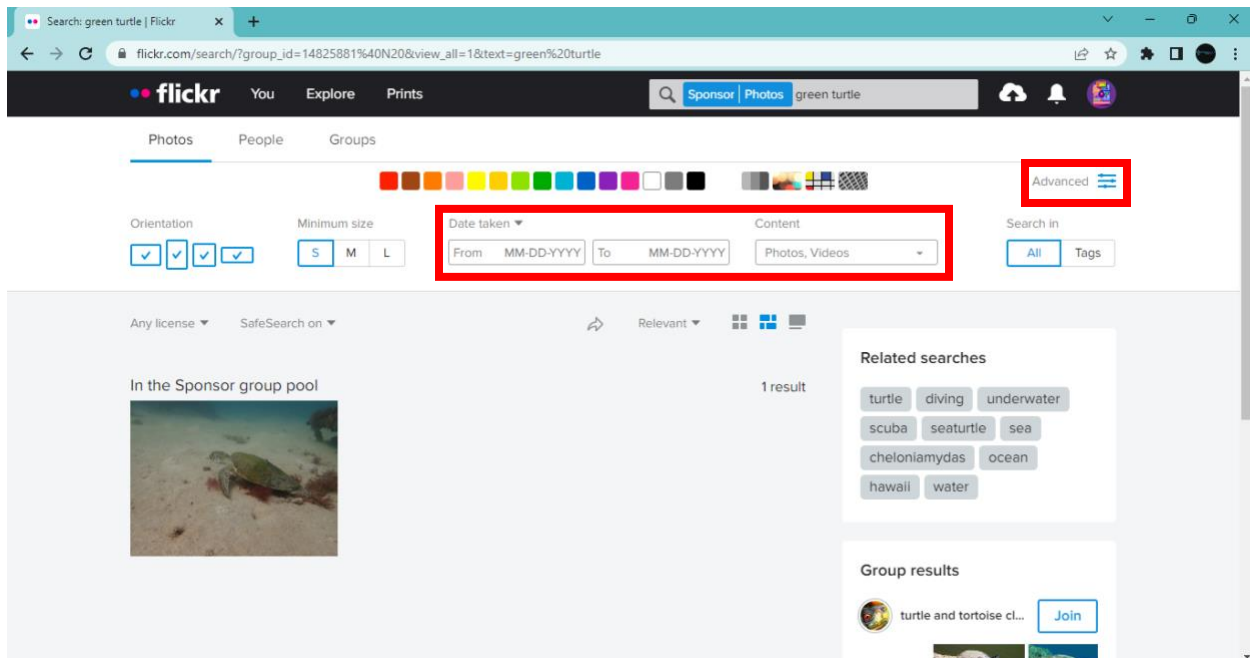

- a. Once clicking the magnifying glass, a blue box will appear in the search bar on the top of the page. Using one or more tags from the tag list we will send you, you can search for all footage with the tag(s) attached.

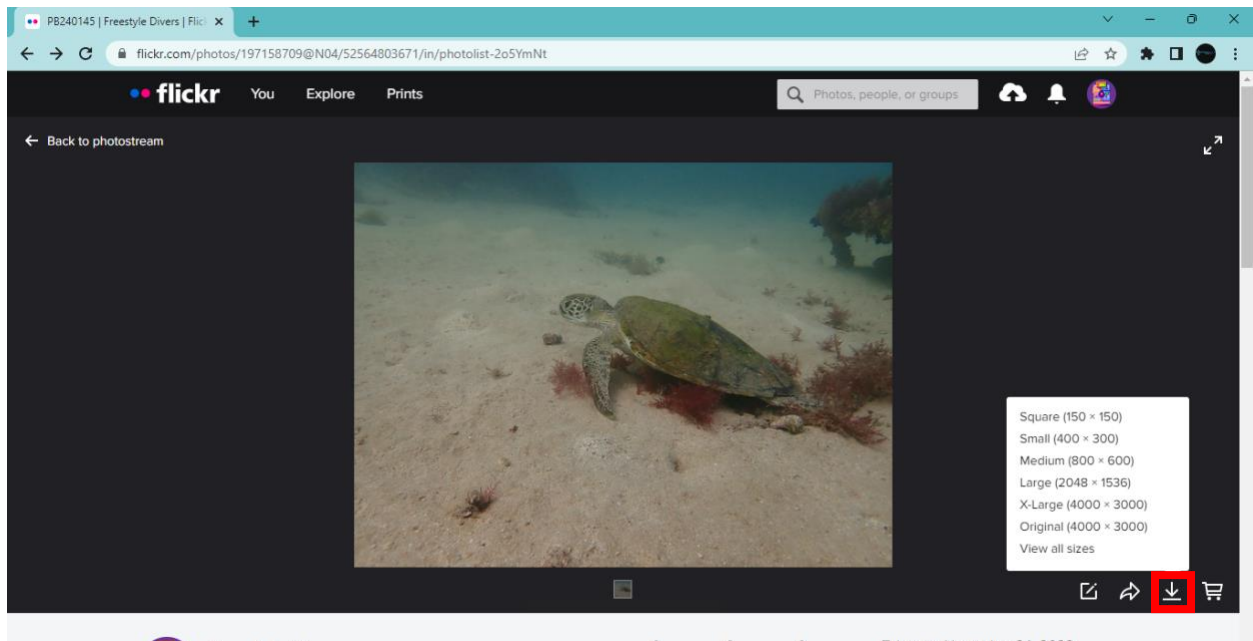

b. There is also an advanced settings search, however for now, the only ones of use will be content (photos/videos) or date taken.

8. If you would like to download any footage, click on the image/video clip. In the bottom right of the photo you will see an arrow pointing downwards to a line. Click that and you will get the different image size options available for download.
